

WHAT MR. ELLIS SAYS.

Cov. Robinson's Charitable View of the Bank Superintendent's Case.

Mr. De Witt C. Ellis, Superintendent of Banking, testified before the Senate Committee yesterday that the balance sheet purporting to have been made out by Mr. Pratt, the book-keeper of the Mechanics and Traders' Bank, showing a deficit of $201,000, was not made out by Pratt, but by Mr. Boat, the receiver. With regard to the deficiency of $181,000, sworn to by Messrs. Floyd and Gregory, Mr. Ellis said that in making out their report they left out $12,000 of assets. He denied that he had ever admitted to either Mr. Floyd or Mr. Gregory that their report was correct. He said: "From the time I met Messrs. Floyd and Gregory in October, 1874 until I closed the bank in 1878, I never had communication with them. When they were in their affidavits they said more falsely. I never received a word of complaint from any one relating to the bank after the examination made by me." We give all the work you can make, and pay cash for it.

COOPERATIVE MANUFACTORY. 100 Walker st.

A.—UP-TOWN ADVERTISERS—We leave their fees for Tax Day at the only authorized town advertisement offices.

200 Broadway, corner of 3rd st., till 8 P.M., and 500 Broadway, corner of Astor Place, between 8th and 9th avs., corner of 47th st., until 8 P.M.

No extra charge.

A.—WHEELER & WISON now No. 8, best machine in the world, or any other wanted, on one year's credit. We give all the work you can make, and pay cash for it.

JACKMAN & O'HARA, 198 and 200 Church st.

A.—ARTIFICIAL FLOWERS—Wanted, good housewives and young girls immediately for city and country work.

A.—PROTESTANT servant for general household in a family. Apply to West Hill st., New York.

A.—WANTED—Chambersmaids, waitresses, cooks, and chambermaids wanted daily at CAREY'S, 2nd floor, West 1st st., Employment Agency, 106 6th av., near 9th st.

A.—FEW woven and clasped hair-skirt makers wanted; to let, at Woven Tape Skirt Works, 86 Walker st.

A.—EXPERIENCED operators—Wheeler & Wilson's machines to make ladies' undergarments at home; deposit required. Apply to 100 Walker st.

A.—ARTIFICIAL FLOWERS—Wanted, good housewives and young girls immediately for city and country work.

A.—CARPENTERS wanted at 208 West 17th st.

A.—VEST, vest, pants makers for custom trade, 104 Broadway, under the bank.

A.—DRUG CLERK—Wanted—One competent in English and German pharmacists. Address, with particular reference to the study of medicine, 106 6th av., New Haven, Conn.

A.—EXPERIENCED裁缝者 wanted to sell to agents selling to large consumers. THE WELLS TEA CO., 201 Fulton st.,

A.—PAINTERS—Two first-class men.

A.—SOLIDER—Any white man, good references, preference given to one who can furnish horse and wagon. Apply between 10 and 12 P.M.

A.—OPERATORS wanted to work in the store on the 2nd floor white suits, 107 Laight st.

A.—STEADY work and moderate wages for boy who is able to take care of children. 86 West 22d st.

A.—SMALL girl to mind a child and make herself useful in a small family. 10 Division st., store.

A.—GOOD button-hole maker wanted white vests. Apply to 106 6th av., 107 Division st.

A.—ARTIFICIAL FLOWERS—Wanted, good housewives and young girls immediately for city and country work.

A.—PAINTER—Wanted, to work in linens suits; come prepared to work. 100 Walker st.

A.—BONSAZ—Enclosed machine—Experienced operators can steady work by piece or week.

A.—WANTED—Tanner wanted to sell to agents selling to large consumers. THE WELLS TEA CO., 201 Fulton st.,

A.—TAILORS—Wanted, two good coal hands to work in 104 Broadway.

A.—THINSMITH at 509 2d av.

A.—WANTED—Delivery man, good bands or produce—magistrate's office reference, preference given to one who can furnish horse and wagon. Apply between 10 and 12 P.M.

A.—WANTED—Two or three first-class painters and blacksmiths; none first-class.

A.—WANTED—One to go to cutting collar, or emblems on Dartmouth College. Apply to 84 W. H. Weston, 106 6th av., between 9th and 11th st.

A.—WANTED—Tanner and clock makers, also boys to learn music. Apply at 174 Hudson st.

A.—WANTED—At once, a man who understands dry scouring and pressing. Naphtha Laundry office, 116 Broadway.

A.—FINISHERS—Wanted on pants also pressers necessary, also embroiderers on skirts, steady work.

A.—WANTED—Tanner wanted to sell to agents selling to large consumers. The 2nd floor of the bank was closed up, said Mr. Ellis. I heard no further complaint from any one as to its condition. The players in the game will be the ones who will be taxed for it. Mr. Ellis even tried to prove that the approbation of the bank's securities had by the list of January, 1874, created an actual capital of $500,000. The bank, however, had been made away with.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis' lawyer read letters showing that the bank applied to a committee to consider the case of Mr. Ellis, and that the committee recommended that he be given a place in the Southern securities and the making good of the deficiency of $21,081. Subsequently the President and the Vice-President went to him and told him to do what he could. He said further: "I went to the Attorney-General's office to get an opinion which I understood had been given to him, and found that all the correspondence in the Attorney-General's office from January, 1869, to 1872, had been made away with."

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis' lawyer read letters showing that the bank applied to a committee to consider the case of Mr. Ellis, and that the committee recommended that he be given a place in the Southern securities and the making good of the deficiency of $21,081. Subsequently the President and the Vice-President went to him and told him to do what he could. He said further: "I went to the Attorney-General's office to get an opinion which I understood had been given to him, and found that all the correspondence in the Attorney-General's office from January, 1869, to 1872, had been made away with."

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued business.

Mr. Ellis further averred that in estimating the value of the securities, he supposed that the bank had a right to assume that the conservative estimate and that in concluding his examination he thought that the interests of the public would not be jeopardized by the bank's continued